

Regulatory Systems (Courts) Amendment Bill

Government Bill

As reported from the Justice Committee

Commentary

Recommendation

The Justice Committee has examined Amendment Paper (AP) No 635 on the Regulatory Systems (Courts) Amendment Bill. We recommend incorporating into the bill AP No 635, along with one minor amendment, which we recommend unanimously and set out below.

In July 2025, we reported to the House on our consideration of the bill. At that time, we unanimously recommended all amendments and that the bill be passed.¹ These amendments are discussed in our earlier report and shown in the revision-tracked version of the bill appended to this commentary.

Background

Regulatory systems amendment bills cover smaller issues and can make improvements across multiple pieces of legislation through one bill.

The Regulatory Systems (Courts) Amendment Bill was referred to us for consideration in February 2025. It was one of four bills that would amend regulatory systems administered by the Ministry of Justice.² The bill's objective is to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the courts system. We presented our report on the bill to the House on 31 July 2025.

¹ A copy of our report is available on the Parliament website.

² The other three—the Regulatory Systems (Tribunals) Amendment Bill, the Regulatory Systems (Occupational Regulation) Amendment Bill, and the Anti-Money Laundering and Countering Financing of Terrorism Amendment Bill—have subsequently received Royal assent.

Since then, ministry officials have identified opportunities for further improvements to the courts system as part of their ongoing stewardship of regulatory systems. Six proposed policy changes are contained in AP 635. The changes align with the purpose of the bill and were vetted against the criteria for a regulatory systems bill. The criteria include that the amendments can attract broad political support and do not make major changes to how policy systems are designed.

On 30 June 2026, the second reading of the bill was discharged and the bill was referred to us for consideration of AP 635.

Changes proposed by Amendment Paper 635

The AP would amend a range of provisions in the bill, which include:

- broadening the regulation-making power in the Care of Children Act 2004 to provide more flexibility for prescribing the fees and expenses payable to providers of supervised contact services
- providing more flexibility in the regulation-making power for prescribing the fees payable to people who prepare specialist reports under the Family Court Act 1980
- extending to Family Court Associates in certain circumstances the Family Court's jurisdiction under sections 86 and 87 of the Protection of Personal and Property Rights Act 1988 (relating to reviews of personal and property orders)
- increasing the number of permanent coroners that may be appointed under the Coroners Act 2006, from 22 to 26
- reducing (from 2 to 1) the number of health assessments required to determine whether a defendant is mentally impaired under the Criminal Procedure (Mentally Impaired Persons) Act 2003
- clarifying that "in writing" requirements for court and tribunal proceedings may be met electronically.

Proposed amendment

This commentary covers the one amendment that we recommend to the AP. We do not discuss minor or technical amendments.

Decisions about reviews of personal and property orders

Clause 20 of the bill as introduced would insert new section 79A into the Protection of Personal and Property Rights Act (the PPPR Act). It would enable Family Court Associates to exercise the jurisdiction of the Family Court to make decisions about undefended applications for personal and property orders, subject to certain safeguards. The safeguards include (proposed new section 79A(3)(a)) that the Family Court Associate exercising jurisdiction must be satisfied that the lawyer appointed to represent the relevant person has met with the person and that the lawyer has carried out their duties under section 65(2)(ab) and (b) of the PPPR Act. These duties are that the lawyer must:

- explain to the person the nature and purpose of the application
- ascertain and give effect to their wishes regarding the application
- evaluate the solutions for the problem for which the order is sought, taking into account the need to make the least restrictive intervention in the life of the person and to enable them to develop and exercise their capacity to the extent possible.

Clause 20B of the AP would replace section 88 of the PPPR Act, which relates to the procedure to be followed on any application for a review of a personal order or property order. It would enable Family Court Associates to also exercise the jurisdiction of the Family Court to make decisions about review applications, subject to certain safeguards.

We understand that when Family Court Associates are exercising the jurisdiction of the Family Court to make decisions on review applications, the same safeguards are intended to apply as those in section 79A(3) when Family Court Associates are making orders on undefended applications for personal and property orders. However, several submitters commented that the safeguards do not appear to match. Specifically, the discrepancy is between proposed new sections 79A(3)(a) and 88(2)(b). Proposed new section 88(2)(b) requires the Family Court Associate to be satisfied that the lawyer has fulfilled their duty under section 65(2)(a) by meeting with the person in respect of whom the review application was made. It does not also specify that the Family Court Associate must be satisfied that the lawyer has carried out their other duties under section 65(2)(ab) and (b). Although proposed new section 88(1) requires the lawyer to comply with the duties in section 65(2)(a), (ab), and (b), we consider that it should be explicitly stated in section 88(2)(b) that a Family Court Associate must be satisfied that the lawyer has done so. We therefore recommend inserting section 88B(2)(b)(ii) to provide that a Family Court Associate must be satisfied that the lawyer has fulfilled their duties under section 65(2)(ab) and (b) of the PPPR Act.

We also note that section 65(2)(a) only provides that a lawyer should, so far as may be practicable, contact the person in respect of whom the application is made. We consider that proposed new section 88(2)(b) is not sufficiently clear whether, to enable a Family Court Associate to review a personal or property order, the lawyer appointed to represent the person in respect of whom the application is made must have met with the person. Accordingly, we recommend amending section 88(2)(b) and inserting section 88(2)(b)(i) to require a Family Court Associate to be satisfied that the lawyer appointed to represent the relevant person has met the person to carry out their duty under section 65(2)(a) of the PPPR Act.

Other matter that we wish to highlight

Section 8A(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Mentally Impaired Persons) Act requires a court to receive the evidence of 2 health assessors to determine whether a defendant is mentally impaired. Clause 100A of the AP would replace section 8A(1) of the Act to reduce the number of required health assessments to 1, but with provision for the court to require additional health assessments in appropriate cases.

One submitter suggested that the Act should be amended to allow nurse practitioners to conduct health assessments under the Act. We were interested in this proposal and requested further advice.

We were told that expanding the scope of health assessors under the Act is a complex area that would require substantial policy work and additional time. The Ministry of Health and Health New Zealand would need to fully examine whether nurse practitioners should be able to complete health assessments under the Act, as well as consider any flow-on implications. Further, any related changes would be too significant to progress through a regulatory systems amendment bill.

We understand that the Law Commission is undertaking a comprehensive review of the Criminal Procedure (Mentally Impaired Persons) Act. Any relevant findings or recommendations from the review could be considered as part of any future work on this matter. We agree that this bill is not the appropriate mechanism to make changes. We encourage the Law Commission to consider as part of its review whether nurse practitioners should be allowed to conduct health assessments under the Act.
